Hesburgh Libraries and Snite Museum Commemorate Centennial of World War I with Exhibition of Russian Prints

Natalia Goncharova’s Mystical Images of War, 1914
On view February 1 through March 22, 2015

NOTRE DAME, IN—December 12, 2014—In conjunction with a year-long commemoration of the centennial of World War I that began in September, the Hesburgh Libraries and the Snite Museum of Art team up to present Russian avant-garde artist Natalia Goncharova’s dramatic portfolio Mystical Images of War, published in 1914. The exhibition runs from February 1 through March 22, 2015, at the Snite Museum on the campus of the University of Notre Dame.

Published in Moscow in the fall of 1914, these 14 lithographs represent one of the earliest and most profound artistic responses to the outbreak of the Great War. Natasha Lyandres, Head of Rare Books and Special Collections at Hesburgh Libraries and curator of the exhibition says, “They tell an epic and mystical story about the eternal struggle between good and evil, destruction and redemption, in which national, traditional, religious, apocalyptic, and contemporary images are intertwined.”

After attending the Moscow College of Painting, Sculpture and Architecture, Goncharova helped move Russian art towards abstraction. Early in 1914, she travelled to Paris where she became familiar with the work of French avant-garde artists Paul Gauguin, Paul Cézanne, and Henri Matisse. At the outbreak of the war, she returned to Moscow and published the Mystical Images of War portfolio. The interaction of heavenly and earthly beings lends the series its mysticism. Her images rely on native religious icons and folk art for their depth of feeling, reinforced by a style replete with sharp angles, bold lines, and stark contrasts.

The Nanovic Institute for European Studies at the University of Notre Dame initiated this re-examination of the war with a film and lecture series looking at the catastrophe that in many ways defined modern Europe. Challenging standard histories of the event, speakers from around the country continue to present new data and interpretations that examine the war's causes and long-term effects on politics, society, culture, and the environment.

Co-sponsored by the Hesburgh Libraries, the Snite Museum, and the Nanovic Institute for European Studies, this presentation of Natalia Goncharova's Mystical Images of War, 1914 is part of a year-long series of events commemorating the First World War.
